Amazon.com in talks to end Calif. sales-tax fight

By Steven Harmon McClatchy Newspapers

The big showdown between traditional retailers and the online sales giant Amazon.com Inc. may dissolve into one big handshake.

Amazon is considering backing away from a referendum to overturn a law forcing the company to collect sales taxes if a deal can be worked out with brick-and-mortar retailers and legislative leaders, according to Capitol sources.

“I wanted to encourage the individual retailers and their associations to get together with Amazon to work this out. It would be a win-win for them and people of California.”

— Bob Dutton, Senate Republican Leader

Talks continued Wednesday, with state Senate President Pro Tem Darrell Steinberg, a Democrat, and state Senate Republican Leader Bob Dutton actively working together to put together a bill that could gain bipartisan support.

“They had a very informative meeting,” Dutton said Wednesday from his office. “I wanted to encourage the individual retailers and their associations to get together with Amazon to work this out. It would be a win-win for them and people of California.”

It is not immediately clear how the Legislature would make up for the $200 million in revenues it was expecting to get from sales taxes Amazon was supposed to collect in the fiscal year that began July 1.

The Legislature approved a budget that included a requirement for online retailers to collect sales taxes. Amazon responded by threatening a referendum.

Amazon would get a two-year reprieve on California taxes but would pledge to support congressional action on leveling the playing field on Internet sales taxes nationally, according to one person involved in talks between the traditional retailers and Amazon. The negotiations took place Tuesday night in the Capitol.

“We’re trying to find a way to not have World War III,” the source said. “There seems to be real interest in reaching an accord.”

California solar manufacturer Solyndra announced Wednesday that it was shutting down a factory built with the help of a $535 million federal loan guarantee and would file for bankruptcy.

It’s the latest blow to U.S. efforts to regain a top spot in solar manufacturing and create jobs in the globally fast-growing clean-energy sector. Another American company, Evergreen Solar, filed for bankruptcy earlier this month.

Solyndra’s put 1,100 people out of work with the closure of its plant in Fremont, Calif. President Barack Obama visited the factory in May 2010 and stressed the importance of increasing U.S. production of solar panels.

Solyndra, which makes cylindrical solar photovoltaic systems for commercial rooftops, said in a statement that it couldn’t scale up fast enough to compete with larger foreign manufacturers. It had been struggling with competition from China.

Solyndra exported its solar systems around the world, most recently to a supermarket rooftop in a suburb of Brussels. It also built the rooftop solar system for Seattle’s football stadium, Qwest Field, home of the NFL’s Seahawks.

Solyndra President and CEO Brian Harrison said the company’s failure was unexpected. He blamed regulatory policy changes that created oversupply and falling prices, and said it had become impossible to raise capital.

The global economics of solar power have been changing fast, the Department of Energy said in a blog post response to the Solyndra news. It cited these trends:

— China, which exports more solar panels to the United States than any other country, has been providing interest-free financing to its companies.

— European countries have been reducing their subsidies for solar power. Europe is the world’s biggest solar market.

— The price of solar cells has fallen 42 percent since the beginning of the year.

In Congress, the Solyndra loan guarantee already had become the focus of a fight over Obama’s economic stimulus program, which included money to boost renewable energy.

The Republicans who control the House Energy and Commerce Committee had been investigating the use of stimulus money in 2009 for the Solyndra loan guarantee. The company ran into financial problems afterward and hadn’t hired as many people

See SOLAR, Page 3

SPORTS

Amazon.com to end Calif. sales-tax fight

By Alicia Luna The Collegian

Genetics and evolution may be the reason behind the psychology of sports fans. Competition along with the biological need to survive encourages athletes and fans alike to become passionate about sports.

“It’s about the competition. We want to see who’s the Alpha Male and who comes out on top,” Fresno State student David Aguilar said.

Fans also find a sense of belonging and accomplishment when their favorite team wins.

“Being a fan of a team describes your character. It’s your membership to your brand,” business marketing and sociology major Estevan Gutierrez said.

Psychology professor Dr. Martin Shapiro explained that physiologically there is a reaction in the male body when they see their team win.

The men get a surge of testosterone, which is similar to when they win a game they are competing in, Shapiro said.

Talks continued Wednesday, with state Senate President Pro Tem Darrell Steinberg, a Democrat, and state Senate Republican Leader Bob Dutton actively working together to put together a bill that could gain bipartisan support.

“They had a very informative meeting,” Dutton said Wednesday from his office. “I wanted to encourage the individual retailers and their associations to get together with Amazon to work this out. It would be a win-win for them and people of California.”

It is not immediately clear how the Legislature would make up for the $200 million in revenues it was expecting to get from sales taxes Amazon was supposed to collect in the fiscal year that began July 1.

The Legislature approved a budget that included a requirement for online retailers to collect sales taxes. Amazon responded by threatening a referendum.

Amazon would get a two-year reprieve on California taxes but would pledge to support congressional action on leveling the playing field on Internet sales taxes nationally, according to one person involved in talks between the traditional retailers and Amazon. The negotiations took place Tuesday night in the Capitol.

“We’re trying to find a way to not have World War III,” the source said. “There seems to be real interest in reaching an accord.”

Internet conglomerate Amazon is negotiating with state government to address its lack of payments in taxes.
Gibson's government blues

The Sticks
JAKE SEVERN

The federal government obviously has a lot of power, but does it ever abuse power by making examples of some companies as a means to intimidate? The federal raid on Gibson Guitar factories is the most recent.

On Aug. 24, armed federal agents raided the iconic Gibson Guitar factories in Memphis and Nashville without warning, under the pretense that Gibson did not comply with an Indian trade law.

“The Federal Department of Justice in Washington, D.C., Gibson’s CEO Henry Juszkiewicz said, “has suggested that the use of wood from India that is not finished by Indian workers, the material seized by the government to show that the wood was obtained legally.”

This is a legendary American brand that is famous around the world for its amazing guitars and is possibly the most famous guitar brand in history. What a shame it is for this company to be dealing with such nonsense after so many years since it was established in 1894.

If Gibson was actually in the wrong, I would understand, but too many things just don’t add up. Like the fact that Gibson was also raided in 2009 when more guitars and wood were seized. The government still hasn’t returned those items or filed charges against Gibson. Obviously, I can’t be positive this is the reason for all of this, but it does make a lot of sense.

I’m not making a point that says Republicans are better than Democrats. I would suggest the same thing if the rules were reversed. The point I am making is about abuse of power, and I don’t care who is doing it, it’s wrong.

Why damage a great American company that hasn’t even been charged with a crime?

Why damage a great American company that hasn’t even been charged with a crime?...
WINNING and losing is an important role in a societ y's perspective of itself. Americans, for example, like sports such as football because there is a winner and a loser.
It is a historical background. Traditionally, the human spe cies have banded together to survive, to overcome their obstacles and challenges. There are great examples of this phe nomenon.

There are other forms of competitive entertainments such as fantasy sports fall into the same category. It express es the male need to compete against one another in other outlets besides physically.

Though solitary competi tions don't require physical interaction, or at least not as much as contact sports, they persist in the idea that men want to know who's better. Shapiro said, "competition increases testosterone," which we all know is key to male physiology for reproductive services. It's a link that men compete for mates like they competitive sports, but it's a different kind of this online paper.

He warns us against rigidly generalizing it, though, by adding, "It's a really complex thing. It's not just because men have more testosterone, but it's a contributing factor."

Although, he would agree that competition is crucial to understanding the draw of sports have. But it's not just because men want to compete for mates like they do in a sport, but it's a contributing factor. There's something more on going like there's bonding and connect edness. It's more about a part of a group that make the inter est in the sport.

Sports are also about the ide ification and categorized individu als. We can make a connection depending on who you root for, Hirt added.

AMAZON: online taxes on the way

Amazon.com was in the midst of an effort to thwart the referen dum with a bill, Assembly Bill 156, which would have kept the tax but only required business to collect it if they have at least $1 million in annual sales. The bill won the support of Lobby, the San Jose, Calif.-based online auction giant. The key was to win enough Republican support to defeat a two-thirds vote, which would have prevented a referen dum on the issue.

Traditional retailers such as Walmart were lobbying Republicans heavily, arguing that it was unfair for them to have to collect the tax but not Internet giants such as Amazon. But it was far from certain they would get their support.

Earlier this week, Senate Republican caucus leader Bob Huff said he doubted Republicans would sign on to the effort to stop Amazon's referen dum.

"My guess is the caucus will take a position against (AB156) in favor of letting the political process work," Hirt said. "As much as there might be merit in policy and we want to help brick-and-mortar stores, there's a bigger play in motion now. This bill will run around the political pro cess."

Huff indicated he would be in favor of allowing Congress to settle the issue.

"The retailers have made some good arguments, but this is one that would be bet ter addressed nationally or in the context of some kind of tax reform that makes a more level playing field for every body," Huff said.

Major obstacles still remain. Anti-tax advocate Grover Norquist sent a letter to Republican crowd this week to Republicans telling them that a vote to thwart the referendum was as good as a vote for taxes. A deal to go around the referendum with a rival measure that will come up in August showed voters were opposed to it on its face.

And Democrats may not be too concerned with backing down from a referendum fight.

A Los Angeles Times poll in August showed voters were evenly split on whether Amazon should be tax ed.

Continued from page 1

Amazon has become an important part of the tax debate in the United States.

Field's sales _ a move that won the

Continued from page 1

Amazon.com was in the midst of an effort to thwart the referen dum with a bill, Assembly Bill 156, which would have kept the tax but only required business

CONTINUED from page 1

Amazon.com was in the midst of an effort to thwart the referen dum with a bill, Assembly Bill 156, which would have kept the tax but only required business to collect it if they have at least $1 million in annual sales. The bill won the support of Lobby, the San Jose, Calif.-based online auction
giant. The key was to win enough Republican support to defeat a two-thirds vote, which would have prevented a referen dum on the issue.

Traditional retailers such as Walmart were lobbying Republicans heavily, arguing that it was unfair for them to have to collect the tax but not Internet giants such as Amazon. But it was far from certain they would get their support.

Earlier this week, Senate Republican caucus leader Bob Huff said he doubted Republicans would sign on to the effort to stop Amazon's referen dum.

"My guess is the caucus will take a position against (AB156) in favor of letting the political process work," Hirt said. "As much as there might be merit in policy and we want to help brick-and-mortar stores, there's a bigger play in motion now. This bill will run around the political pro cess."

Huff indicated he would be in favor of allowing Congress to settle the issue.

"The retailers have made some good arguments, but this is one that would be bet ter addressed nationally or in the context of some kind of tax reform that makes a more level playing field for every body," Huff said.

Major obstacles still remain. Anti-tax advocate Grover Norquist sent a letter to Republican crowd this week to Republicans telling them that a vote to thwart the referendum was as good as a vote for taxes. A deal to go around the referendum with a rival measure that will come up in August showed voters were opposed to it on its face.

And Democrats may not be too concerned with backing down from a referendum fight.

A Los Angeles Times poll in August showed voters were evenly split on whether Amazon should be tax ed.

Continued from page 1

Amazon has become an important part of the tax debate in the United States.

Field's sales _ a move that won the

CONTINUED from page 1

Amazon.com was in the midst of an effort to thwart the referen dum with a bill, Assembly Bill 156, which would have kept the tax but only required business to collect it if they have at least $1 million in annual sales. The bill won the support of Lobby, the San Jose, Calif.-based online auction
giant. The key was to win enough Republican support to defeat a two-thirds vote, which would have prevented a referen dum on the issue.

Traditional retailers such as Walmart were lobbying Republicans heavily, arguing that it was unfair for them to have to collect the tax but not Internet giants such as Amazon. But it was far from certain they would get their support.

Earlier this week, Senate Republican caucus leader Bob Huff said he doubted Republicans would sign on to the effort to stop Amazon's referen dum.

"My guess is the caucus will take a position against (AB156) in favor of letting the political process work," Hirt said. "As much as there might be merit in policy and we want to help brick-and-mortar stores, there's a bigger play in motion now. This bill will run around the political pro cess."

Huff indicated he would be in favor of allowing Congress to settle the issue.

"The retailers have made some good arguments, but this is one that would be bet ter addressed nationally or in the context of some kind of tax reform that makes a more
level playing field for every body," Huff said.

Major obstacles still remain. Anti-tax advocate Grover Norquist sent a letter to Republican crowd this week to Republicans telling them that a vote to thwart the referendum was as good as a vote for taxes. A deal to go around the referendum with a rival measure that will come up in August showed voters were opposed to it on its face.

And Democrats may not be too concerned with backing down from a referendum fight.

A Los Angeles Times poll in August showed voters were evenly split on whether Amazon should be tax ed.
Fantasy Football fun but is it too time consuming?

By Rodrigo Andrade
The Collegian

Fantasy football is a game where you have an imaginary team with real life players and you get your score based on the performance of those players in their respective games. There is just so many things you can do in fantasy football are to have a draft, many of which have worked together on previous projects. Their past projects helped give the actors' chemistry that was apparent on screen.

Though this movie may not be as good for any awards, it is well directed and enjoyable. Pain learning: this movie is hilarious, so if anyone is expecting that, they will be disappointed. It is more of a cross between Jeff Bridges character “The Dude” in the movie “The Big Lebowski” and Paul Rudd’s character “Josh Lucas” in “Clueless.” This movie may not be worth the price of regular admission but it won’t disappoint for a matinee price.

Fantasy Football fun but is it too time consuming?

By Irene Velez
The Collegian

“Our Idiot Brother” pieces together familiar relationships with an indie vibe, made sweet and cheerful by the clearly casted actors that bring emotional depth to their roles. The movie begins when a uniformed officer tricks a uniformed officer into selling him marijuana. As expected, it all goes to jail. Upon his release he finds that his “girlfriend” has dumped him and is keeping the adorable golden retriever named Willie Nelson. So, Ned is forced to crash at his sisters’ houses, where he reveals to them far more than they were ready to handle.

The archetypal fool is Ned, played by Paul Rudd, who is in every way most-natured and genuine, far more so than his sister, who unlike Ned lives in the real world. Liz is a homemaker who along with her husband Dylan, spend time teaching their children empty morals.

Miranda is a non-nonsense wannabe journalist, trying to get published in Vanity Fair. Lastly, sister Nat (Zooey Deschanel) is an unfailing stand-up comedian and artist’s model.

Directed by Jesse Peretz, the movie portrays Ned as the sweet and naive sibling, who seems to be the only person in the movie that cares to carry himself with sincerity. As it turns out the movie is a combination of the skeeviest and best moments of the season; the three sisters become united when Ned maintains his personal integrity. Several scenes provide the movie with just the right amount of comedic relief for situations that are really very uncomfortable and difficult in real life.

Many of the characters embody stereotypical cliché roles. The character Cindy is the bruiser lesbian living with Nat in a communal crash pad.

Other characters were pushed past their clichés and given depth and emotion, as was the case with Liz and her husband Dylan (Emily Mortimer and Steve Coogan, respectively). This movie could be labeled an ensemble piece as there are so many big names, many of which have worked together on previous projects. Their past projects helped give the actors’ chemistry that was apparent on screen.

Though this movie may not be up for any awards, it is well directed and enjoyable. Pain learning: this movie is hilarious, so if anyone is expecting that, they will be disappointed. It is more of a cross between Jeff Bridges character “The Dude” in the movie “The Big Lebowski” and Paul Rudd’s character “Josh Lucas” in “Clueless.” This movie may not be worth the price of regular admission but it won’t disappoint for a matinee price.

Fantasy Football fun but is it too time consuming?

By Irene Velez
The Collegian

"Our Idiot Brother" pieces together familiar relationships with an indie vibe, made sweet and cheerful by the clearly casted actors that bring emotional depth to their roles. The movie begins when a uniformed officer tricks a uniformed officer into selling him marijuana. As expected, it all goes to jail. Upon his release he finds that his “girlfriend” has dumped him and is keeping the adorable golden retriever named Willie Nelson. So, Ned is forced to crash at his sisters’ houses, where he reveals to them far more than they were ready to handle.

The archetypal fool is Ned, played by Paul Rudd, who is in every way most-natured and genuine, far more so than his sister, who unlike Ned lives in the real world. Liz is a homemaker who along with her husband Dylan, spend time teaching their children empty morals.

Miranda is a non-nonsense wannabe journalist, trying to get published in Vanity Fair. Lastly, sister Nat (Zooey Deschanel) is an unfailing stand-up comedian and artist’s model.

Directed by Jesse Peretz, the movie portrays Ned as the sweet and naive sibling, who seems to be the only person in the movie that cares to carry himself with sincerity. As it turns out the movie is a combination of the skeeviest and best moments of the season; the three sisters become united when Ned maintains his personal integrity. Several scenes provide the movie with just the right amount of comedic relief for situations that are really very uncomfortable and difficult in real life.

Many of the characters embody stereotypical cliché roles. The character Cindy is the bruiser lesbian living with Nat in a communal crash pad.

Other characters were pushed past their clichés and given depth and emotion, as was the case with Liz and her husband Dylan (Emily Mortimer and Steve Coogan, respectively). This movie could be labeled an ensemble piece as there are so many big names, many of which have worked together on previous projects. Their past projects helped give the actors’ chemistry that was apparent on screen.

Though this movie may not be up for any awards, it is well directed and enjoyable. Pain learning: this movie is hilarious, so if anyone is expecting that, they will be disappointed. It is more of a cross between Jeff Bridges character “The Dude” in the movie “The Big Lebowski” and Paul Rudd’s character “Josh Lucas” in “Clueless.” This movie may not be worth the price of regular admission but it won’t disappoint for a matinee price.

With the National Football League season about to begin, fans are already showing their excitement. At Fresno State many students, employees and even professors are talking football. The reason they are talking about football is not just because the football season is around the corner, but because of all the great things that come with it. One of those great things is fantasy football.

Fantasy football is a game where you have an imaginary team with real life players and you get your score based on the performance of those players in their respective games. There is just so many things you can do in fantasy football are to have a draft, many of which have worked together on previous projects. Their past projects helped give the actors’ chemistry that was apparent on screen.

Though this movie may not be as good for any awards, it is well directed and enjoyable. Pain learning: this movie is hilarious, so if anyone is expecting that, they will be disappointed. It is more of a cross between Jeff Bridges character “The Dude” in the movie “The Big Lebowski” and Paul Rudd’s character “Josh Lucas” in “Clueless.” This movie may not be worth the price of regular admission but it won’t disappoint for a matinee price.

With the National Football League season about to begin, fans are already showing their excitement. At Fresno State many students, employees and even professors are talking football. The reason they are talking about football is not just because the football season is around the corner, but because of all the great things that come with it. One of those great things is fantasy football.

Fantasy football is a game where you have an imaginary team with real life players and you get your score based on the performance of those players in their respective games. There is just so many things you can do in fantasy football are to have a draft, many of which have worked together on previous projects. Their past projects helped give the actors’ chemistry that was apparent on screen.

Though this movie may not be as good for any awards, it is well directed and enjoyable. Pain learning: this movie is hilarious, so if anyone is expecting that, they will be disappointed. It is more of a cross between Jeff Bridges character “The Dude” in the movie “The Big Lebowski” and Paul Rudd’s character “Josh Lucas” in “Clueless.” This movie may not be worth the price of regular admission but it won’t disappoint for a matinee price.

Fantasy Football fun but is it too time consuming?

By Irene Velez
The Collegian

Fantasy football is a game where you have an imaginary team with real life players and you get your score based on the performance of those players in their respective games. There is just so many things you can do in fantasy football are to have a draft, many of which have worked together on previous projects. Their past projects helped give the actors’ chemistry that was apparent on screen.

Though this movie may not be as good for any awards, it is well directed and enjoyable. Pain learning: this movie is hilarious, so if anyone is expecting that, they will be disappointed. It is more of a cross between Jeff Bridges character “The Dude” in the movie “The Big Lebowski” and Paul Rudd’s character “Josh Lucas” in “Clueless.” This movie may not be worth the price of regular admission but it won’t disappoint for a matinee price.

"Our Idiot Brother": Not your typical Rudd flick

By Rodrigo Andrade
The Collegian

Fantasy football is a game where you have an imaginary team with real life players and you get your score based on the performance of those players in their respective games. There is just so many things you can do in fantasy football are to have a draft, many of which have worked together on previous projects. Their past projects helped give the actors’ chemistry that was apparent on screen.

Though this movie may not be as good for any awards, it is well directed and enjoyable. Pain learning: this movie is hilarious, so if anyone is expecting that, they will be disappointed. It is more of a cross between Jeff Bridges character “The Dude” in the movie “The Big Lebowski” and Paul Rudd’s character “Josh Lucas” in “Clueless.” This movie may not be worth the price of regular admission but it won’t disappoint for a matinee price.

Fantasy football is a game where you have an imaginary team with real life players and you get your score based on the performance of those players in their respective games. There is just so many things you can do in fantasy football are to have a draft, many of which have worked together on previous projects. Their past projects helped give the actors’ chemistry that was apparent on screen.

Though this movie may not be as good for any awards, it is well directed and enjoyable. Pain learning: this movie is hilarious, so if anyone is expecting that, they will be disappointed. It is more of a cross between Jeff Bridges character “The Dude” in the movie “The Big Lebowski” and Paul Rudd’s character “Josh Lucas” in “Clueless.” This movie may not be worth the price of regular admission but it won’t disappoint for a matinee price.

Fantasy football is a game where you have an imaginary team with real life players and you get your score based on the performance of those players in their respective games. There is just so many things you can do in fantasy football are to have a draft, many of which have worked together on previous projects. Their past projects helped give the actors’ chemistry that was apparent on screen.

Though this movie may not be as good for any awards, it is well directed and enjoyable. Pain learning: this movie is hilarious, so if anyone is expecting that, they will be disappointed. It is more of a cross between Jeff Bridges character “The Dude” in the movie “The Big Lebowski” and Paul Rudd’s character “Josh Lucas” in “Clueless.” This movie may not be worth the price of regular admission but it won’t disappoint for a matinee price.
Get $5 in MP3 Credit When You Spend $50 on Textbooks*

Music, textbooks, and everything else for school

*Offer Details: Applies only to textbooks sold by Amazon.com. Textbook purchase must be made by 11:59 pm (Pacific Time), September 30, 2011. MP3 credit expires 11:59 pm (Pacific Time), October 10, 2011. Amazon may modify or cancel this offer at any time. Limit one per customer. Offer may not be transferred or resold. Void where prohibited. Offer limited to customers located in the U.S. Must agree to Amazon Digital Services, Inc.'s MP3 terms of use. Additional terms and conditions may apply, see www.amazon.com/legal/textbooks for details.
ArtHop provides Fresno locals creative stage

By Joel Perez

Hundreds of people visited downtown Fresno yesterday evening for Thursday’s ArtHop, as artists showcased their work.

ArtHop is a monthly event happening the first Thursday of every month across town. It displays art in 70 different venues in downtown Fresno, Tower District and metropolitan and outliers areas.

Local artist and recent Fresno State graduate, Julia Scott, has shown her own art work at the Broadway Studios in downtown Fresno and now occasionally shows her work at the Iron Bird Lofts.

“The community response to ArtHop has been very positive,” Scott said. “Large crowds of people venture to downtown and the atmosphere is bustling with energy and inspiration for artists and non-art folk alike.”

K-Jewel Art Gallery curator, Michael Kallmann says “K-Jewel has been involved in 32 ArtHop [and] has featured 32 different artist and 25 youth musical groups.”

Tuesday evening, K-Jewel featured two professional photographers that presented beautiful landscapes. Tim A. Fleming’s photograph of Yosemite was one of the most striking images that was presented at K-Jewel alongside with photographs by Phil Hawkins.

Kallmann said that K-Jewel got involved because the gallery was a focal point of the downtown area, and John Ouellet, owner of K-Jewel, had always been a booster of the revitalizing the area and the month Art Hop wanted to be a part of it.

“The architectural look of K-Jewel made it the perfect place to feature local artists,” Kallmann said.

Many Fresno State art professors and students have shown their own work at ArtHop. It is a way for them to show their work to hundreds of people on a night that many will appreciate it the most.

“I enjoy talking with the artist to get their perspective on a piece - and it’s free,” former Fresno State student Frank Cuevaier said on why he enjoys this Thursday tradition.

ArtHop has given Fresno Art a monthly stage where all artist and art lovers can unite and enjoy local pieces and images. ArtHop is one event that is also helping revitalize downtown’s image.

“ArtHop funnels opportunity and energy to the creative community in Fresno,” Scott said.

Christina Rea says, “the best thing about ArtHop is having access to a wonderful thriving art scene without leaving Fresno.”

Ray Manzarek and Roy Rogers ready to give audiences the blues

By Brian VanderBeek

MODESTO, Calif. _ Ray Manzarek is one of the legendary founding members of the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame as the keyboardist and founder of The Doors.

But while an admitted baseball follower, he’s obviously not a die-hard fan of either the Los Angeles Dodgers _ The Doors’ home team _ or of the San Francisco Giants _ Manzarek’s home team for a longtime Napa resident.

How do we know this? Check out his answer to this ques tion.

Manzarek was asked last week how difficult it is to switch back and forth between his bands. He plays roughly half his live dates with Doors guitarist Robby Krieger and the other half with blues slide guitarist Ray Manzarek-Rogers Band, “Translucent Blues,” is tough to pin down. It’s part straight-ahead blues, part Doors-y ‘60s rock, part ethereal jour ney, party smoky beer-and-a shot lounge.

“We jam live and we extend things,” said Rogers, 60. “The songs on the CD are always a framework for what we do live.”

“We approached this collaboration in the recording very well thought-out, down to the sequencing of the songs. As good as the recording should be, you always should be better live because of the person ality you can inject.”

And you won’t get much more personality than Manzarek, who’s equally at home spinning tales of his rock ‘n’ roll life and culling ahead blues, part Doors-y ‘60s rock, part ethereal jour ney, party smoky beer-and-a shot lounge.

“We’re both very self-depre cating,” Rogers says. “It’s about being yourself, and Ray is always like that. He’s been around the block a few times and we both know that if the musicians are having fun, then everybody’s having fun.”

Manzarek-Rogers shows generally include some Doors tunes, most frequently play “Riders on the Storm,” and “Crystal Ship.”

“Ray and Roy do cover a couple Doors songs and the entire Ray and Roy CD, and it’s all amazing blues,” Manzarek says. “It’s a thrilling gristle of a show. As we play, a pyra mid rises right over your head. Everybody loves a blues show. Everybody Republicans and Democrats alike love the blues.”

That’s something upon which even Giants and Dodgers fans can agree, as long as you don’t ask them to swap hats.

Ray Manzarek has an energy and a spirituality that bursts through the phone. He’s been playing live for more than 50 years and vows to make every show as fresh as the first.

The recent release by the Manzarek-Rogers Band, “Translucent Blues,” is tough to pin down. It’s part straight-ahead blues, part Doors-y ‘60s rock, part ethereal jour ney, party smoky beer-and-a shot lounge.

“At 71, Manzarek has an energy and a spirituality that bursts through the phone. He’s been playing live for more than 50 years and vows to make every show as fresh as the first. The recent release by the Manzarek-Rogers Band, “Translucent Blues,” is tough to pin down. It’s part straight-ahead blues, part Doors-y ‘60s rock, part ethereal jour ney, party smoky beer-and-a shot lounge.

We’re both very self-depre cating,” Rogers says. “It’s about being yourself, and Ray is always like that. He’s been around the block a few times and we both know that if the musicians are having fun, then everybody’s having fun.”

Manzarek-Rogers shows generally include some Doors tunes, most frequently play “Riders on the Storm,” and “Crystal Ship.”

“Ray and Roy do cover a couple Doors songs and the entire Ray and Roy CD, and it’s all amazing blues,” Manzarek says. “It’s a thrilling gristle of a show. As we play, a pyra mid rises right over your head. Everybody loves a blues show. Everybody Republicans and Democrats alike love the blues.”

That’s something upon which even Giants and Dodgers fans can agree, as long as you don’t ask them to swap hats.
The Aquatics Center finally opens

The Fresno State swimming and diving team will finally have its own facility with the Aquatics Center opening up. Both teams can practice in the facility but there is still some construction taking place.

By Tim Salazar

The Fresno State swimming and diving team finally has its own facility to call home. The Fresno State Aquatics Center is still under construction, but the pool is open for the Bulldogs to practice and compete next season.

Recently, the Dogs have had to use the pools at Clovis North High School and Clovis West High School in order to get in their afternoon practices six days a week. The Bulldogs had to rent vans to be able to travel to both facilities. Since they couldn’t use their own facility, players sometimes were forced to miss practice because of conflicts in their class schedules.

The new facility, located adjacent to Bulldog Diamond, will provide the program with a larger pool and will allow for those who couldn’t previously practice more opportunities to get their time in the pool. Head coach Jeanne Fleck gave some thoughts on how she felt about the aquatic center: “I love it.” Fleck, who was interviewed at the new facility said, “It gives us an extra two hours in the day for our girls to have classes. We’re not driving and waiting for showers.”

The new facility is larger than the North Gym pool that the team has used before. The pool in the North Gym was only six lanes long and 11 feet deep. Also, the old pool was unavailable if a class was scheduled for the same time. Since then he’s won the sec- tion seven state titles in Track, the Boys were falling on the one hand, he was playing small and imitating another quarterback. On the other hand, he was playing as a freshman then, he’s already two almost older now.

Q: What can Fresno State expect from Cal’s offense?
A: A classic, pro-style offense that strives for an even mix of run and pass plays. That said, there have been occasional spread offense plays (zone read, designed QB runs) mixed in, and Zach Maynard’s mobility might encourage Tedford to do that more often. If he has the run- ning back and offensive line to do so, Tedford is not afraid to go out of his way about establishing the run and pounding an opponent into submission. But unless the line improves from last year, that may be the only thing that Cal can do right now.

Tedford doesn’t seem to run as many trick plays as he did earlier in his tenure, but he’s still fond of misdirection plays like reverses and end arounds, and he’ll mix in the wildcat formation as well. Expect him to try to get the ball to Keenan Allen any way possible.

Q: What kind of quarterback is Zach Maynard?
A: Perhaps the most mobile quarterback Tedford has ever had. Coming from his time at Buffalo and Cal practice indici- ate that he might be a better thrower while on the run. It’s not clear if he can make all of the passes you want a colle- giate quarterback to make - he threw a few too many inter- ceptions while at Buffalo. On the other hand, he was playing as a freshman then, he’s already two almost older now.

Q: What can Fresno State expect from Cal’s defense?
A: A stiff front seven and lots of pressure, but the poten- tial is there to make big plays if the Bulldogs can put their playmakers in the right places. Cal is young and aggressive at various positions on defense, and that means the potential for big plays in both directions.

Last year when the defense played well and produced big plays it led to blowouts against Colorado, Arizona State and UCLA. But teams like Nevada and USC executed perfectly and took advantage of that aggressiveness, routing the Bears in the process.

Q: What are some thoughts on Mychal Kendricks?
A: He was a revelation last year, easily our most explosive linebacker. He has a knack for snuffing out a play and made some truly impressive tackles last season. He’s one of Cal’s best defensive ends.

On defense, the key will be Fresno State’s revamped offensive line vs. Cal’s blitz- ing front seven. A young offensive line and a relatively green quarterback sound like a recipe for disaster against an aggressive, talented front seven. But if that line can pick up those blitzes I don’t doubt that Carr has the talent to make the Bulldogs pay.

W e are less than two days away from the Fresno State versus California at Candlestick Park. This will be the first game between Fresno State and California since 2000 when the ‘Dogs came out with the vitory 17-13.

Nicolas Franz is a blogger for the Golden Bears and he talked to the Collegian about a couple things that could affect the ‘Dogs during the game:

Q: What has coach Tedford’s impact been on this program?
A: Immeasurable. When Tedford arrived Cal suffered through 40 years of consist-ently awful football, with only occasional, brief glim- mers of hope. Worse than that, he inherited what must be one of the worst backfields in Football. Since then he’s won the sec- tion seven state titles in Track, the Bears in the process.

Q: Which players are difference makers in the secondary and on the defensive line?
A: On the defensive line it’s tough to pick out just one play- er, in part because the strength in Cal’s line is depth rather than one or two standout individuals. Trevor Guyton is likely the name you’ll hear the most on Saturday the senior is likely Cal’s best pass-rusher on the line.

Other than the previously mentioned Steve Williams, safety Sean Cattouse is the most important player in the secondary. He’s shown the ability to deliver some hard hits and is the most likely man to produce a big play over the middle.

Q: What will it take to beat Fresno State on Saturday?
A: Offense I think the key matchup will be Logan Harrell against Cal’s interior linemen. Cal’s offensive line wasn’t great last year, and you don’t face defensive tackles with 10 sacks all that often. If they can keep him from blowing up plays at the line of scrimmage, Cal’s offense should be able to move the ball with reasonable success.

On defense, the key will be Fresno State’s revamped offensive line vs. Cal’s blitz- ing front seven. A young offensive line and a relatively green quarterback sound like a recipe for disaster against an aggressive, talented front seven. But if that line can pick up those blitzes I don’t doubt that Carr has the talent to make the Bulldogs pay.

Sports editor Q & A with California blogger

London Winter/Spring 2012
3-Week Winter Session
Orientation/Class Meetings
Sunday, Sept. 18 1-3 p.m. ED 140
Sunday, Oct. 16 1-3 p.m. ED 140
Sunday, Nov. 13 1-3 p.m. ED 140
For more information contact Carla Miller, London Program Office, California State University, Fresno, Munc 186 or call (559) 278-3056.
Bulldog Game Day

FRESNO STATE BULLDOGS

CALIFORNIA GOLDEN BEARS

2010 OVERALL RECORD

FRESNO STATE

- 8-5
- WAC Conference Record

CALIFORNIA

- 5-7
- Pac-12 Conference Record

WEEK 1 PREVIEW

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, AT 4:00 p.m., CANDLESTICK PARK

BREAKDOWN: BULLDOGS

Pat Hill is undefeated in the last seven season openers as head coach of the Fresno State football team. He will try to extend that streak when the ‘Dogs travel to San Francisco to battle California on Saturday. Hill will rely on the run game to ease new starting quarterback Derek Carr into his first start. With junior Robbie Rouse and a stable of running backs, the ‘Dogs can set the tone with the run game.

As a first-time starter, Carr will be thrown into the fire against the top-ranked defense in the Pac-10 from last season. Carr will feel the edges and a quarterback who can deliver. The ‘Dogs have a lot of speed on the defensive side of the ball, look for the ‘Dogs to extend Hill’s season opener streak to seven.

BREAKDOWN: GOLDEN BEARS

If California has any hope of improving on last season’s 5-7 record, it will most likely be in the form of defense.

The Golden Bears return middle linebacker Mychal Kendricks and safety Sean Cathouse from the Pac-10’s top-ranked defense from last season. Kendricks (6-feet, 240 pounds) will be Fresno State’s main problem on the defensive side of the ball. Senior Cathouse (6-foot-3, 218 pounds) will give the ‘Dogs established balance.

Keys to Victory

1. Contain Maynard
   - California’s starting quarterback is not as mobile as he was in the past. Zach Maynard hasn’t played in a Pac-10 game since he was a senior in 2009. Going into Saturday’s game, the ‘Dogs don’t know much about Maynard, but reports are saying he is a mobile quarterback which has given the Bulldogs problems in the past.

2. Establish a run game
   - Fresno State has played California twice with the Bulldogs winning both meetings.

   - The Golden Bears have one suspect area and that is in their passing game. Last season, they averaged 175 yards passing per game. This could be more of a problem with a brand new quarterback starting for them this year. Junior Zach Maynard will be his first start for California on Saturday at Candlestick Park.

3. ‘Be special’ on special teams
   - California favored by 10 points
   - Given the Bulldogs problems in the return game, field goals and extra points will be crucial. The ‘Dogs will need to make a special fields goal or punt block that could swing the momentum in their favor.

Position Match-ups

Defense:

- Fresno State: 24
- California: 21

- Fresno State leads 2-0

- FRESNO STATE BULLDOGS
  - WR, Trevor Guyton, DL.
  - LB, Mitchell Schwartz, DL.
  - WR, Trevor Guyton, DL.

- CALIFORNIA GOLDEN BEARS
  - WR, Keenan Allen, WR.
  - DB, Phillip Thomas, DB.

- ADVANTAGE - EVEN

Getting to know the ‘Bay Area’ Golden Bears

- Jeff Tedford
  - Tenth year as head coach of the Golden Bears

Special Teams

- Advantage - Even
  - Fresno State return All-American punter Bryan Anger, who averaged 150 yards per game last season. California’s running back Isi Sofele will be starting just his third game as a Golden Bear.

Video:

- Check out the Fresno State-Cal preview online.
  - http://collegian.csufresno.edu